

Late Monday, the attorney general's office released 2,200 e-mails between Attorney General Marc Dann; his aide, Jessica Utovich; and others.

The staff at The Vindicator organized representative emails by topic, using long black lines to separate different exchanges. The e-mails in this section seem to reflect emotional exchanges between Dann and Utovich.

To read the emails in the order in which they were sent, go to the bottom of each section separated by a black line and read up.

Please do not EVER tell me to stop acting emotional. I try to do my job to the best that I can and you shit on it. I try my hardest to make sure you are taken care of, do what you need too and prioritize only to have you complain and change everything without telling anybody. Your emotional crap is what makes everyone else miserable. I'll stop being so emotional if you let me do my job and stop taking things out on me and other people here.

Uh huh. I didn't realize there were unresolved issues from this am.

Sincerely,

Jessica

I'm sorry. I shouldn't have had that conversation in that manner. I tried to talk to you earlier. You became totally defensive and my anxiety level increased dramatically because of those unresolved issues. On0

I would like to ask you to please consider not yelling at me in front of the floor. Please address all problems via email/in-person, or better yet to Ed, Tom, Colleen and/or

Leo who can then address me. Again, I try my best to make sure everything is taken care of, including the perception that comes along with the scheduling aspect (being on time, making staff aware, making the others aware, making the security and drivers aware, the trickle-down effect it has on everything after it).

I appreciate constructive criticism and confrontation when things are not working properly as I like to do the best that I can and try to make arrangements to your liking.

However, I do not appreciate being yelled at in front of everyone. If I'm doing that bad of a job where everyone needs to know, then maybe we should talk.

Sincerely,

I am too, but my face hurts and burns from crying and I can't keep fighting.

Sincerely,
Jessica

From Sept. 19:

You realize everytime that you tell someone to do something re: your schedule, within this office, it allows them to continue to go behind our backs and create more problems.

I put so much stuff on this afternoon and would have been more than willing to put on her other stuff - I already added her in 2x today! This is crap.
